Elizabeth Giordano's story in her own words:

My husband was diagnosed on April 7th with Lung Cancer for a non-smoker with an unknown primary. He is not curable, just treatable. He just underwent his last chemo treatment and we are not sure what his maintenance plan will be. The latest scan showed a new tumor on his liver so we are not sure what to think of that at the moment. My role has now become caretaker and mother to my two little girls 3 and 16 months. It has been extremely hard on them, and I'm trying my best to give them a normal childhood. However they will never really have a normal childhood, since they are having to go through this terrible chain of events with their father's cancer. I'm trying my best to keep things going, but it truly takes a village. For more information, anyone can go to my Caringbridge account. <http://www.caringbridge.org/visit/toddgiordano>
